Established in 2003 as a merger of departments Urban Affairs & Planning (UAP) and the Center for Public Administration & Policy (CPAP) and the formation of a third program, Government & International Affairs (GIA), SPIA has become a university leader in interdisciplinary professional social science education. The School offers two undergraduate, three masters, and two Ph.D. degrees; has headcount enrollment of 557 students; and has the largest resident academic program in the National Capital Region with twelve tenure-track faculty in residence.

Since its founding SPIA has been a “factory of excellence,” with significant contributions to discovery, learning, and engagement.

- Each year SPIA’s 32 tenure-track faculty produce 5-10 books, 25-30 book chapters, 55-60 refereed articles, 90-100 presentations, and about $2 million in sponsored projects (see research productivity table). Faculty have an international reputation demonstrated by many honors and awards and invited keynote addresses and other presentations across the country and around the world (see table on awards and honors in 2010-11).
- SPIA graduates more than 50% of the College’s masters degrees and more than 90% of its Ph.D.’s. Total enrollment has increased by 30% in the last five years, led by undergrad enrollment growth of 76% from 2007 to 2011; masters and Ph.D. enrollment has increased 11% and 28% respectively since 2006 (see instruction data tables). SPIA continues to develop new initiatives, such as the successful CPAP Local Government Management Graduate Certificate program, the summer European Study Abroad, pending MOUs with European universities (Kent and Bern), and revival of SPIA's flagship undergraduate enrichment program, the Washington Semester.

- SPIA provides strong service to the university, the community, and the world. Its accredited professional programs require engagement outside the university since "the community is the laboratory" for urban planning, public administration, public policy, and international affairs. The School has strong collaborations with the Office of Economic Development; the Office of International Research, Education and Development; the Office of Energy & Sustainability, and many academic departments. Prominent University officials, such as Charles Steger, Jim Bohland, Erv Blythe, and Paul Knox, have their roots in SPIA programs.

Like many departments, SPIA has maintained in the face of budget cuts but only with the diligence and hard work of its faculty. While enrollments have increased dramatically, faculty, staff, and financial resources have shrunk. Some faculty departures over the past five years have been replaced by excellent young faculty, but others remain unfilled. We fear attrition of faculty, quality graduate students, and our capacity for new initiatives if we do not recover faculty and resources lost.

We are developing a plan for advancement which we hope to achieve with the assistance of the College and the University. Broad elements of that plan include raising the research and educational profiles of the individual programs and the School nationally and internationally, moving our top-20 accredited programs up to the top 10, strengthening the capacity for interdisciplinary research and teaching, attracting and retaining outstanding junior faculty across the School by fostering ongoing opportunities for faculty research and development, and continuously advancing our pedagogy and research opportunities for part time and full time students pursuing professional and academic careers.

Central to accomplishing our plans will be securing crucial and urgently needed resources. Specifically:

- Filling vacated faculty positions with a hiring plan for six faculty for fall 2012.
- Securing five additional SPIA faculty positions requested by the Dean and SPIA's Academic Budget Development Resource Request.
- Establishing program and SPIA Advisory Boards to enhance professional and alumni relations and strengthen our programs.
- Work with friends of SPIA, including Minnis Ridenour and some prominent donors, to attract private funds to name the school and establish endowed programs and professorships.

Special Activities

- Contributions to University Diversity Mission: In addition to a range of research work conducted by faculty on research initiatives (e.g., research on low-income inner city minority populations) and integrating diversity issues into undergraduate and graduate courses (e.g., urban public issues, racial segregation, affordable housing, and community development), UAP developed a Diversity Speakers Series organized by Derek Hyra in 2010-11 that brought in six speakers to its Blacksburg and Alexandria campuses to speak on various aspects of diversity and their implications for the urban planning field.
- Contributions to University Outreach Mission: Much of the research and teaching within SPIA uses the community as the laboratory which is important for its professional programs in planning and public affairs. Service learning is an integral component of many classes, contributing to students' professional education, serving the community, and often engaged in conjunction with funded projects. Examples of this integration include the Eco-City studio for the City of Alexandria, planning studio for Tinner Hill community in Falls Church, environmental planning studios for the Blacksburg Climate Action Plan, and senior seminars for projects in the New River Valley and Middle Peninsula Planning Districts. In addition, CPAP's Local Government Management program has flourished in its second year, providing graduate education to local government officials across the state to educate the next generation of municipal government officials.
